Animal Assisted Therapy

A Look at the Benefits of Integrating Therapy Dogs Into the Treatment of Adult Women Suffering from Sexual Assault Related PTSD

Based on the statistical evidence listed above, the Cleveland Rape Crisis Center (2014) suggests sexual assault is becoming an epidemic in the United States. In regard to the statistical evidence, Bates (2014) believes that sexual trauma is better resolved with the aid of counseling or psychotherapy. Counseling or psychotherapy is offered to survivors in the hopes to contain or eliminate the anger, fear, depression, or anxiety that many people feel after experiencing sexual assault (2014). In recent years, studies (which will be examined later on in chapter 2) have been conducted regarding animal assisted therapy and the healing benefits animals have on patients suffering from trauma, more specifically PTSD. According to Kruger, Trachtenberg and Serpell (2004), " Animal Assisted Therapy [AAT] involves specifically trained animals and professionals working as co-therapists" (p.4). AAT is based on the principal that human beings wellbeing can be improved through the integration of animals in the therapeutic process. Becker and Hughes (2010) describe AAT as "a interaction with a gentle, friendly animal, which can instantly catalyze rapport building and trust, as well as brighten one's emotional outlook" (Para. 1). Due to the nature of sexual assault, trauma survivors often experience feelings of fear or lack of trust and are reluctant to seek help or talk to a health care professional because of their belief that thinking or talking about their attack will be too painful and re-traumatize them.

Feminist Perspectives in Therapy

An Empowerment Model for Women

Wiley Introduces a feminist approach to counseling and psychotherapy of women. Among the issues discussed are the special problems of women in a therapeutic setting, sex-role socialization, inadequacies of contemporary theory and practice in addressing women's lives, the development of alternative approaches to conceptualization and intervention with women. Both authors are feminist clinicians with experience in the teaching, research and practice of counseling and psychotherapy with female clients.

Counseling to End Violence against Women

SAGE Feminist theory has viewed violence against women as being a result of a male-dominated society; however, traditional counselling approaches to helping battered women have neither addressed this view nor encouraged social change. The author of this challenging volume seeks to bridge this gap by incorporating feminist theory with counselling practice. Whalen argues that a counsellor working with an abused woman should not aim merely to empower the client to change a situation that is intolerable for that particular woman: the counsellor should also aim to change the social conditions that foster abuse. The author's model focuses on women collectively seizing power and ending violence against all women.

Preceding each contributed essay, the authors provide continuity to the text by conducting an "assumption audit" of the key points and ideas inherent in each respondent's chapter. They then integrate these assumptions in a final chapter addressing the future of multicultural theory development.
