Volume 4.2

01 Editorial | Language Out of Context    05 News | The latest in creative teaching

08 Cognitive tools across the curriculum

Staff at Clyst Vale Community College describe how they incorporated cognitive tools into their everyday practice to develop students' thinking skills.

17 Can you picture the music?

When it comes to being creative, do your students ever lament, 'I can't do it – I haven't got any ideas'? Philip Davis uses images and sounds to make that claim impossible.

26 Using synaesthetic principles to develop extended writing

Marcella McCarthy uses aural, visual and tactile strategies to bring language to life and encourage her young students to be more adventurous in their creative writing.

36 Poetry made easy

Inspire even the most unenthusiastic of poets with this straightforward but inventive idea, presented by David Harrison and Judith Dalton-Morris.

45 The joy of not knowing

Students at Hertford Infant and Nursery School love not knowing... but why? Headteacher Marcelo Staricoff explains.

CROSS CURRICULUM PROJECT PLAN

Investigating local history

How has your town developed over the years? Who lived on the local high street? What job did they do? Answer these questions and more with this in-depth investigation into your hometown and its history.

54 Exploring the scope of mathematics

David Pratt examines the limitations of mathematics, and how in real-world situations, it's more than just the numbers that count.

61 Creating bridges into the past

Tim Taylor takes an imaginative approach to teaching the Anglo Saxons, which will feature heavily in the new Key Stage 2 history curriculum.

68 Our place in history

Websites and online resources to assist you and your students in exploring your local area and its historical significance.
