Features

18 Raising aspirations through empowerment and leadership

Joan Deslandes, OBE shows how AfA's 'Achieving Schools' framework is helping students to overcome their backgrounds and have meaningful opportunities for growth and leadership.

26 Embracing inclusion

Funding cuts and test-based accountability systems have been implemented over the past decade, making it more difficult for SEND students and schools across the board. James Bowen calls for an inclusion mentality to be placed back at the heart of the system.

30 How much tolerance is there in our system? The case for a 'rounded' approach

Zero-tolerance behaviour policies are being proposed in some schools and Georgina Newton believes that this is dehumanising and that instead policies should be based on compassion.

35 Developing resilience with emotion coaching

How can students be taught how to process difficult emotions and become more secure in their environment? Janet Rose and Louise Gilbert share how Emotion Coaching is turning around emotionally-charged situations for children and teachers.

46 Imagining the closing of the gap

What if we had a system that was fair and equal for all? Despite the efforts of educators, policy makers and communities, progress in this area is not being made. Sam Butters of the Fair Education Alliance explores what it would really mean to close the gap.

52 Reducing the impact of Trauma for Looked After Children

How can teachers improve the chances of Looked After Children in their classroom? Tony Clifford shows how building a relationship using attachment principles can make a big difference.

58 Closing the literacy gap with early years music

Can basic music training improve literacy skills? Sue Newman shares the research and outlines a new music training program that is helping early years children get ahead.

66 Getting off to a flying start

What can be done to help students with the transition from pre-school to primary school? Michelle Doyle Wildman from Parentkind offers ideas for tapping into one of the most important resources, parents.
